Like Ready-to-Use Children's Silhouettes for Holidays and Special Occasions (Dover Clip-Art), this Clip Art collection provides a look into a carefree and innocent period of life--at a time when it really was carefree and innocent. There are nearly 800 lovely BW pictures, mostly silhouettes and pen-and-ink sketches and line drawings, taken from a variety of women's and children's magazines c. 1910-30. Some are of contemporary subjects, others historical, going back to Colonial times (it helps if you have some familiarity with the general trends of children's clothing). Kids are seen with their mothers and fathers, as babies and toddlers, reading, in school, with their toys, with their friends, helping out around the house, enjoying seasons and holidays, making music, on bicycles, doing crafts--all the things children filled their time with in the days before organized activities and electronic gadgetry. (Watch for a pair of sisters--one blonde, one brunette--from hoopskirt days who keep turning up at various points in the book.)

This Dover publication is a wonderful collection of cuts from magazines and children's publications from the 1910's and 1920's. The illustrations were collected by the author and her family over the years. The collection includes children of all ages and in all areas of life - including various seasons - Christmas, Easter, Halloween, - and children of different cultures. There are some lovely sets of cut-outs - children with different sets of clothing with tabs like the paper dolls we played with as children. This book would be a wonderful source of clipart for many applications, including scrapbooks. Limited permission is given to use the cuts for graphic and crafts applications. A companion publication by the same author is 'Spot Illustrations from Women's Magazines of the Teens and Twenties'.
