Recovering an Ancient Practice for Modern Evangelicals Historically, the church's ministry of grounding new believers in the essentials of the faith has been known as catechesis--systematic instruction in faith foundations, including what we believe, how we pray and worship, and how we conduct our lives. For most evangelicals today, however, this very idea is an alien concept. Packer and Parrett, concerned for the state of the church, seek to inspire a much needed evangelical course correction. This new book makes the case for a recovery of significant catechesis as a nonnegotiable practice, urging evangelical churches to undertake this biblical ministry for the sake of their spiritual health and vitality."Packer said that the greatest challenge for the twenty-first-century church was to recatechize and disciple believers. These contributions from two of our best Christian thinkers help us to do precisely that. It will help you to see how to make not just converts but, as Jesus tells us, disciples." •Chuck Colson, founder, Prison Fellowship"More than a call to recover a neglected practice, Grounded in the Gospel provides concrete advice to us all for dedicating ourselves anew to rooting the next generation in the great truths of the faith." •Michael Horton, J. Gresham Machen Professor of Theology, Westminster Seminary California"I want to prod parishes of all denominations to listen to Packer and Parrett's cries and constructive proposals to better equip new believers. This is an urgently needed book!" â•Marva J. Dawn, author of Is It a Lost Cause? and Talking the Walk; teaching fellow in spiritual theology, Regent College"At last, a book that tells local churches how to fulfill all of the Great Commission! I highly recommend this book to pastors and church leaders who want to encourage Christian intelligence and maturity in their people."â•Warren W. Wiersbe, author of the "BE" commentary series"This book emphasizes two critical factors: learning is important, and catechesis is about the holistic development of the whole people of God. Christian learning needs to make a comeback in the church. This book will help."â•Linda Cannell, academic dean, North Park Theological SeminaryJ. I. Packer is Board of Governors' Professor of Theology at Regent College and an senior editor for Christianity Today. I really enjoyed reading this. This is such an important message for a Biblically illiterate generation of Christians. The recent Renaissance in Christian apologetics has been great for reminding Christians of the need to know **why** they believe what they believe, but that is really predicated on actually knowing **what** you believe in the first place. That's where this book's call to catechesis comes in. It is a reminder to look back to traditions we've let slip away, to reacquaint ourselves with an old friend of the church for most of its history: the catechism. In evangelical circles, we tend to think of the catechism as a Catholic device, forgetting that Luther and other Protestants had catechisms as well. But more importantly, the early church, before there was Catholic and Protestant, had formal teaching of new inquirers and members to pass on faithfully what they had received. We have fallen far from that level of diligence, but may Packer's and Parrett's call to renewed emphasis on teaching sound doctrine bring us back closer to God. Parrett's look at the importance of hymnody is also a welcome relief from the emotionally-driven, worldly "worship songs" being sung in a lot of churches now. Not that those are all bad, or that the style is wrong or anything like that. But Parrett reminds us that we are always singing theology, the only question is whether it's good accurate theology or a distorted view of God made in man's image instead of the other way around. Overall, I highly recommend the book.

This book is an answer to our prayers for our brothers and sisters in the evangelical churches. I watch a lot of 'religious' programming on tv and the need for catechesis is overwhelming. Packer and Parrett have laid out a step by step road map on how to catechise the preachers and teachers who can then catechise the faithful. We Christians tend to think that we are all on the same page but we're not. This book not only points to the right page but lays out how to get there. This is not the quickest read you'll ever enjoy but it's worth the work.

This book will help you consider the catechesis of the church. How can we best communicate who we are and what we believe.

The authors do a nice job giving both the historical and biblical precedent for catechesis along with practical suggestions on how to get started in our churches today.

This book will guide you back to a wholehearted full education and training for all ages in your church.

I just finished reading the book and bought 40 copies for the teachers in our church. Packer and Parrett have provided a great case for the need to return to catechesis today, asking a fundamental question, "What must we teach?" My only suggestion would be further biblical support with other key terms (i.e. sterizo - Acts 14:22; 15:41; 16:5; 18:23; Rom 1:11; 16:25; 1 Thes 3:2) and key passages (i.e. Acts 11:26 - What did Barnabas and Saul teach that enabled the Antioch church to grow "strong" such that the Holy Spirit saw fit to send them both out (vs. Simeon, Lucius and/or Manaen?)) and ask "what did the apostles teach?" to guard against reading church history back into the first century (NT). For an excellent present day catechical tool I am using, see "The First Principles Series" by BILD Int'l ([...]).

I read this book because I heard the authors interviewed in an episode of the White Horse Inn radio program (WHI-986, Feb. 28, 2010). I thought their thesis - that the church is strongest when it places an emphasis on catechesis - was intriguing. The book did not disappoint. According to the historical evidence presented in the book, it does appear that the church has been strongest when its catechetical efforts have also been strong. And as the emphasis on catechesis wanes, so does the overall strength of the church. Considering the lack of doctrinal depth and biblical knowledge of many in the Protestant churches I have been associated with, I think this is a message that Protestants need to both hear and apply in their individual congregations.
