Dick DeVenzio gave his life to sports and to a set of beliefs, ideas and convictions mostly related to the intelligent pursuit of excellence in sports. The son of a very successful basketball coach, Dick grew up wanting to be a basketball star. That led to daily schedules and all-day practicing by the time he was in 7th grade. By 10th grade, he was a varsity starter, averaging 20 points a game "at 5'6", and the next year he averaged 30 "at 5'9". In his senior year, he led Ambridge High School to an undefeated state championship, and he is still considered the best to ever play in Pennsylvania. His name is in the Basketball Hall of Fame, on Parade Magazine's 1967 All-American First Five. Two years later, at Duke University, Dick was an All-ACC selection, and in 1971, a First Team Academic All-American. After graduating from Duke, Dick played and coached professional basketball in Europe and South America and founded the now nationally acclaimed Point Guard College. Considered by many to be a basketball genius and gifted writer, Dick's writings and basketball programs have inspired and influenced countless coaches and athletes. He died in 2001 at age 52.

This will definitely improve your game and passion for the game!

This was a gift for my son who is a high school basketball coach. He has a very competitive spirit and enjoys reading to gain knowledge and understanding; he requested this particular book and has had nothing but positive comments since reading it.

Every player needs to read this. I am a head high school girls coach and have recommended this book to all players as a summer reading 'assignment'. Worth every penny.

A great book. Easy to read. A must for players and coaches alike.

Best basketball book I have even read, seen or owned! Awesome stuff!

Great Book

Necessary before going to the excellent Point Guard College
